

Welcome!

Journaling is a great way for young writers to fall in love with writing, they can learn to express themselves in the way that feels right to them and they don't have to worry about spelling or grammar.

Their journal is private and should only be looked at if they offer it to you.

The point of the journal is creative expression, to allow thoughts and dreams to spill onto the pages and it's not just for kids, you can join in to!

I hope all of the family enjoy their journaling time, pop over to my Facebook page and let me know how it's going!

<https://www.facebook.com/MyOrganizedChaosJo>

Jo xxx

Things I can see...

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners and a light gray border, intended for drawing or writing about things that can be seen.

Things I can smell...

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners and a light gray border, intended for drawing or writing about things that can be smelled.

Things I can hear...

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners, outlined in a light gray color. It is positioned below the text 'Things I can hear...' and is intended for a child to write down what they can hear.

Things I can feel...

A large, empty rectangular box with rounded corners, outlined in a light gray color. It is positioned below the text 'Things I can feel...' and is intended for a child to write down what they can feel.

The colours I can see...

Activity area for coloring. It contains 12 empty circles arranged in a grid-like pattern for children to draw and color.

If I were a tree I would...

Activity area for writing. It contains 15 horizontal lines for children to write their responses to the prompt.

